Communication:

Personal Injury Lawyers have an important advantage over any claims management company account advisor - experience and understanding of the law!

That is why injury lawyers have the word 'personal' tagged onto their job description - they understand the emotional issues involved with accidents or injuries experienced by a person. They understand the levels of confusion, fear and anxiety an individual may go through during a claims process.

They understand the need to make things clear and precise to their clients and explain in detail what happens next thus nullifying the negativity a person may experience.

Achieving The Best Deal:

When it comes to getting you the maximum amount expected for your claim then a personal injury lawyer will always be fighting for your corner. Preparation is the key to achieving the maximum for your claim because the insurance companies will undoubtedly pick holes in your evidence attempting to reduce the claim amount or even having the claim quashed.

Being Prepared:

A majority of cases are settled-out-of-court where an agreement has been reached on compensation. But what about those cases that are contested? Where a court date is the only way to settle the claim!

This is what an experienced personal injury lawyer has been in preparation for - going to trial. Do you really want to put your claim in the hands of a lawyer / solicitor who looks no further than settling-out-of-court? This relates back to the level of service that we spoke about earlier, how meticulous in detail an experienced injury lawyer is in preparing your case from the offset.

Being Aware of Costs:

Nowadays, most firms offer "No Win No Fee" claims. In its simplest form it means the
